

Aviation myth-busters: “A good landing is one you can walk away from”

By David Learmount on 24 September, 2013 in Uncategorized Stenkovec aerodrome, near Skopje, Macedonia on 21 September. An Israeli Cessna 172 is on final approach. There are three people aboard.

oops, a bit high on the round-out...

I think a touch of power might be a good idea...

oops, wing-drop...

...aaah! too late, wingtip-scraper...

...oh dear! Here we go. Brace brace!

...sorry chaps...

...I do not have control...

...oops, the engine's fallen off. I hope this stops soon...

...I think the other end is coming off now.

But at least we're still here to tell the tale!
So it qualifies as a landing. Doesn't it, chaps?
Please don't look at me like that!

(Pictures: Dragan Cvetic; information: Igor Bozinovski)